While playing a football (soccer) match, a student named William Webb Ellis picked up the ball with his hands. To everyone's surprise, he then ran with the ball! By 1871, a number of teams in England formed the Rugby Football Union. They wrote the game's rules.

In 1866, the first rugby match in Japan on record was played in Yokohama. The players were British sailors. Japanese people watched, but they didn't play.

It is said that rugby officially began in Japan in 1899 through Edward Bramwell Clarke and his friend Ginnoy Tanaka. When they were studying at Cambridge University, they enjoyed playing the game. After, Clarke came to Keio University as an English lecturer in 1899. Tanaka turned out to be a businessman. They introduced the game to the students at Keio University.
